HOW often have you attended an interesting lecture and pondered over its content? These B.Tech students enrolled for one and got hooked to Blockchain technology. They then decided to create a platform for the same. "The aim is to create a space that gives access to multiple resources at the same place," said Sammed. The project started around May last year and the website was launched in August. "It has made our lives very hectic. We do not get time for extra-curricular activities or long trips, but we are hopeful the project will be a success," said Rohit. The third year students are required to give up to 60 hours to studies per week. That leaves them with about 10 hours for work. "We meet on the weekends and allocate tasks that need to be done through the week," said Smeet. In fact, the project has helped them ace in academics. "Our grades have improved. Since we now have limited time to study, we have learnt to focus better on the task at hand," shared Manas.
